as-beir (*ess-ber-, Ped. ii 466). IGT Verbs § 6. In the prot. -epir there is some fluctuation between e- and a-, see Thurn. Gramm. pp. 54, 508 and forms infra.

In Mid. Ir. a form atbeir (prot. -epir, -ap(a)ir) replaces as-beir, see Thurn. Gramm. p. 268. Later this becomes a(t)deir (prot. -apair) and is the usual form in late Mid. and Mod. Ir. Occasionally adeir (sometimes deir) is given the endings of a simple verb, see infra. The early conjugation (ā-subj., ē-fut., t-pret.) continues with Mid. Ir. personal endings. In the pret. new stem-formations appear: adubart (< adrubart); adebart, adébart (? conflation of adubart and -epert); adobart, adóbart. In depend. position -dubart; -ebert, -ebart, -ébart, -debart, -débart; -óbart, -dobart, -dóbart. In classical verse (IGT loc. cit.) adubart, adobart alliterate with d; adóbart, adébart with a vowel and with d.

Later with gradual obsolescence of inf. pron., beginning where verb is in dependent position, and ultimately as simple verb éirgid, q.v. Some forms of the s-subj. and fut. may explain exx. given under dreisid. In mid. Irish a form a(t)fraig(id) arises with inorganic -f- prob. originating in cases where the inf. pron. ended in a vowel (cf. ataregat, LU 8191, atafregat, 8200). The ipv. atré, etc. is an orig. s-subj. form (Thurn. Gramm. 375, Watkins, Celt. Verb 139, Zimmer, KZ xxx 118–9). The s-subj. and fut. are distinguishable only by context. The form atraacht occurring occas. in mid. Ir. may be a dissimilation-form from the perf. atraracht. Cf. also atralacht cited below. at-roí expld. by Ped. ii 636 as from *ess-ro-so- with inf. pron. failed (to do or get someth.). 'Orig. the person who failed was the object, what he failed to achieve was the subject; e.g. a-t-roi a n-guin "their killing turned him away" "he failed to kill them" (Hib. Min. 70.10)', Lewis and Ped. 398. Usage however fluctuates somewhat in the exx., and it is not certain that the verb contains the root *so- or that it is connected with éraid (see as-ren, éraid, as-soí). rabāi . . . orci i seilb charat Cairpri . . . atrōe Coirpri ūad C. could not get it (the dog) from him, Corm. In follg. application of inf. pron. less clear: tuirsech mo menma. Addro luamain ⁊ addagin eónu aili I could not fly, Im. Brain ii 292.31 (see Celtica v 139). doluid críne form assennath ⁊ addró imthecht (forémed, v.l.) I was unable to walk, 287.30.

attá (ad-tá) subst. vb. is. The distinction betw. subst. vb. and copula is in the first place syntactical, and cases are found where there is no distinction of form. Cf. the type, common in ACC: boe sab he was a leader, 26. See further below, and the discussion by Bergin, Ériu xii 208–11 (cia taísiu, cia bé, etc.), who refers to cases like: is uera pictura ro bai sin, Thes. ii 6.32 as emphatic. See also Ériu xvi 46, Thurn. Gramm. 475. For nimtha laám, Wb. 12^{a}21, nímptha fírion, 8^{d}24 (copula ?) see Thurn. Gramm. 487. Note also the form of the pron. in (later): matait tall iat, Laws iv 86.8 Comm., atá ar conair é, Arch. iii 216.z. bí N. eices cecinit, RC xvii 175.14 is perh. a mistake. In follg. use of subst. vb. perh. due to infl. of Latin: mar nobéind athair doib = pater eram pauperum, PH 6107. ata in innsci ordugud etc. = oratio est. . . , Auraic. 591.

Apart from the ordinary indic. pres. all forms of subst. vb. are from a root beginning with b-. In indic. pres. the stem tá (in absol. position attá) is used in non-rel. sentences without conj. particle, after conj. particles with inf. pron. dat. and when the conj. particle consists of a preposition and rel. (s)a n-. Absolute inflexion of tá- is found in oldaas, indaas, etc. than (is), in meaning is angry, and with follg. suff. pron. The uninflected form fil (with accus.) is used after conj. particles where no dat. inf. pron. is present, in leniting rel. clauses and often in answers to questions containing subst. vb., and in archaic texts in absol. position in meaning there is. For fuller details see Thurn. Gramm. 476-83 and exx. below. See also Ped. ii 419 ff., Strachan, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1899, 1–82, Ó Máille, Ériu vi 1 ff. Forms of gaibid, do-coissin, -díxnigedar and ad-cumaing also have the force of the subst. vb. in certain uses, see separate entries.

Note further that attá is usual after hóre (see Wb. 19^{a}19, 22^{d}14 and compare Thurn. Gramm. § 781) and occurs later after amal (LU 7072, Laws iii 90.18). Fil is somet. found in sense there is in mid. Ir.: fail crois d'ór in cach dorus, SR 361. TBC^{2} 2561. Note also: fil derg it is red, Marco P. 173.

The use of accus. after fil continues into the classical period, see IGT Introd. § 129, Bard. Synt. Tr. 92–3. A few exx. of forms other than fil with accus. occur: ni raibi deilb, TTr.^{2} 1664, ní raibi . . . mhnái, 370, ní bhiadh mnaoi, Ó Bruad. ii 252.z (with assonance). Note also with inf. pron. rosṁbai inna tass, SR 5107. ? nim tha maith . . . do chath fri firu, LU 3343 (SC 13). From the mid. Ir. period on fil takes personal endings except in 3 s., and occurs occasionally as an independent verb: faeilfit (fut. 3 pl. absol.), Caithr. Thoirdh. 120.26. In rel. function attá is found side by side with fil from an early period: is heiside attá hi S., Trip.^{2} 534, a lucht atá istig, RC vii 298.131, the form fil finally disappearing in this use.

In mid. Ir. fil occurs for earlier -tá with dat. inf. pron.: nichar fail tlacht, SR 1560, ni-s-fil biad, PH 1310. Also in rel. clause after prep.: bale hi fail, LU 7516, fors fil, Im. Brain 43 (see also Strachan, Stories fr. Táin 3rd ed. p. 1 note).

The consuet. pres. 1 s. conj. -bíu has in classical Ir. the force of a future: biad ní biú, IGT Verbs § 7, see also TBC 882, Acall. 6179, Duan. Finn i 43.4.

B, second letter in the Irish alphabet, and the first consonant of the Ogam alphabet. Irish name beithe birch ; hence beithe luis, name of Ogam alphabet, see IGT Introd. § 4.

O.Ir. b in absolute initial position, after m (imb), and sometimes after l (Albu) and r (orbae) represents the voiced labial plosive (Mod. Ir. b), and derives from IE *b, *bh and *g^{w} (Thurn. Gramm. § 188). In other positions it represents the voiced labial fricative (Mod. Ir. bh), and derives (i) from the sources already mentioned, together with *p in IE *-pr-, *-pl- (accabor, díabul), ib. § 227, and (ii) from IE *u in certain positions (tarb, cubus, etc.). It is possible, however, that the sound in case (ii) was not phonetically identical with that in case (i), since they sometimes have different sandhi treatment; compare dupall (dub-ball) with atrefea (atreb-fea) and derbráthair, modern dearbhráthair (derbbráthair); compare also ropia (ro-b-bia), and in later gairpeann (from garbh + peann), IGT Introd. § 42. The -b(-) of the O.Ir. f-future is, according to the latest explanation of this formation (Watkins, Ériu xx), a voicing of f<*sw.

O.Ir. bb in all positions represents the unlenited sound (abb, abbán).

In Latin loanwords initial b- remains (baithis, baitsid). Ir. b- sometimes represents Lat. p- (bóc, Sg. 46^{a}2), and medial -b- (<earlier -p-), representing a voiced plosive, Lat. -p- (puball s.v. pupall, abstal, Wb. 10^{c}16). The Lat. post-vocalic voiced stop -b- became in Irish a voiced fricative (scríb(a)id, Mod. Ir. scríobhaidh). For -b- for Lat. -f- (cobais) see Thurn. Gramm. § 201.

In the later language b combines with prec. m (Mid.Ir. imm for imb), and initial mr, ml, become br-, bl- (brath, bláith for older mrath, mláith); medial lenited b and m are sometimes confused (mebuir for memuir).

In Laws lowest of the three ancient divisions of rank in Irish law, rí, aire febe, b. ‘ corresponding roughly to . . . ‘king, lord and commoner,’ Críth Gabl. p. 98. See Mac Neill, Law of Status, PRIA xxxvi (1923) C 267. The b. belongs to the grád Ḟéne as opposed to the aire febe who belongs to the grád ḟlatha, Laws v 290.14-16 Comm. Here grád Ḟéne denotes plebeian as opposed to noble rank of the grád ḟlatha (cf. Críth Gabl. loc. cit.). In a later seven-fold division the b. is second lowest in rank of seven grades of the grád túaithe or ‘ laymen grades,’ Críth Gabl. 10, p. 98, 99. The b. was originally the sole grade of the ‘ commoners,’ or freeholders recognized by Law, pp. 77, 98, 99. The mruigḟer ‘ farmer ’ must be regarded as the ordinary b., p. 78. The fodlai bóaireach ‘ divisions ’ of the b., 16-18, consisting of eight grades, in reality seven acc. to Binchy, who comprise the grád Ḟéne are a later development, p. 99. The name b. is translated ‘ noble of kine ’ by MacNeill, loc. cit.; the compiler of Críth Gabl. understands that his status comes from his property in cattle: is dia búaib direnar, 329; Binchy prefers Thurneysen's suggstion that the name comes from the ‘ bés ’ or annual food-rent of a cow paid by the b. for a fief of stock, Laws ii 260.10, see Críth Gabl. p. 77 and Laws v 392.1. Law, regulation, rule: fine, tax, tribute. Precise legal significance difficult to define. Appar. regarded as statute law (a law imposed by a king, perh. by an over-king) or by the church (Ériu xii 69, Ir. Hist. Stud. xiii 101-3) in contrast to aurradus customary law. It is always more severe than the latter, ZCP xiv 339. See Cóic Con.Fug. pp. 65-66. Frequ. glossed by ríagail (Laws ii 222.3 Comm. etc.). The wider meaning written law undoubtedly derived from the numerous monastic ordinances issued in the 8th cent., Thurn. ZCP xviii 396. By annalists appar. equated with lex (see AU Ann. 733, 736, 766 and Index s.v. Law).
